Top engg. college stares at lapsed seats

Toppers likely to quit B.E. if they get through MBBS

R. SUJATHA
CHENNAI

With the State government going ahead with the Tamil Nadu Engineering Admissions (TNEA 2017) without conducting the medical counselling due to the continuing suspense over NEET-based admissions, evidence emerged that many seats could eventually "lapse" in the prestigious Anna University's constituent colleges.

On Sunday, when the TNEA academic counselling began, three of the 10 toppers with a cut-off marks of 200, who were eligible for medical admissions as well, made it clear that they would quit their B.E. seats in the premier College of Engineering, Guindy (CEG) once they got admission to MBBS course.

One of them, Sathishvar T., ranked sixth, picked the Electronics and Communication Engineering seat at the CEG. He has also scored 435/720 in NEET. Similarly, Siddharth Haldurai, who has also chosen ECE but has a NEET score of 378 and Kaviya P., who took Computer Science Engineering and has a NEET score of 270, are confident they would be admitted to a government medical college eventually.

When students quit the course mid-way, seats in CEG are placed in the "lapsed" category, which means they go waste depriving another meritorious student of an opportunity to study in the prestigious institution. Anna University officials said they would have to contend with vacancies that arise due to the shift to medicine as counselling was a manual process. Some professors, however, said the vacancies may not be as many as in the previous years.
